Brief Report:

Introduction: On August 24, 2024 at 7 PM, the Women Development Cell organized online screening of Anurag Kashyap's film That Day After Every Day, which focused on the critical issue of eve teasing. The movie highlights the disdain of three women who, after enduring daily harassment, finally take a stand against their tormentors. The session was hosted by the president of the cell and was enriched by the presence of faculty member Ms. Padma Priyadarshini and 30 participants.

The Post Screening Discussion:

The movie was praised for the outstanding performances by the actresses, whose nuanced and subtle gestures added depth and realism to their characters, creating a more immersive experience for the audience. However, some attendees reflected on the portrayal of self-defence as a primary means of empowerment, noting that it places the burden of combating gender-based violence solely on women. This also sparked a discussion on the broader implications of such representation, including issues like victim blaming and men's lack of accountability. The discussion also shed light on factors contributing to women's oppression, such as economic and financial dependence on men, as well as cultural and emotional institutions that reinforce gender inequality. Many attendees also perceived this as a safe space to share their past experiences of physical and emotional abuse. The final points emphasized the importance of ongoing efforts to critically analyse and dismantle the socially constructed gender disparities and the systemic oppression of women.
